

dedicated to its service; with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion; as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man, who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat, in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow-citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favourite object of my heart; and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labours and dangers.

G. WASHINGTON.

United States, 17th September, 1796.

LONDON, July 16.

THE Dutch and the Flemish papers concur both with the German and the French in giving the most favourable representation of the position of the French armies on the right bank (as it is commonly called) of the Rhine.

The French have, by a well concerted plan, and by following the system of tactics, recommended to them by Carnot, and practised in the campaign before the last, been eminently successful. They have not made their principal attack in front, but have penetrated by the flank of the enemy, opposing a strong column to a feeble line, and thus insuring victory, without the mortification of having purchased it by a heavy loss. We do not go the full length of believing that the late retreat of Jourdan was merely a manoeuvre; but if otherwise, it must certainly be admitted, that he has admirably contrived to retrieve a misfortune, which in war is next to avoiding one.

BOSTON, September 15.

A letter from Cadiz, dated July 20, says, "The mail has just arrived from Gibraltar, bringing an account of fourteen sail of American vessels having been taken by the Algerines and other devils."

This article of information was received yesterday, and occasioned a considerable degree of anxiety in the minds of many. We are happy to have it in our power to prove the falsity of the above article from the following authority.

Captain Plummer, who arrived last week, left Gibraltar four days subsequent to the date of the above letter, and makes no mention of any such intelligence being in circulation at the time of his sailing. In addition to which, Captain Hilman arrived here last evening from Cadiz, which place he left the first of August, who says, that such a report had been circulated, though without any foundation, and which gained not the least degree of credit.

Captain Hilman, gives it as his opinion, that war is declared between England and Spain before this.

From Cadiz, by Captain Hilman, in 44 days, we have the latest news. No British fleet was then cruising off the harbour; and the French fleet under Richery, were taking on board their small stock preparatory to sailing.

They expected to proceed to sea the next day after Captain Hilman sailed.

PHILADELPHIA, September 23.

A letter from Detroit, of August 15, says, that Michilimackinac is evacuated by the British, and will, in the course of two weeks, be occupied by our troops.

By recent arrivals from Port-au-Prince, we learn that several British men of war lay there, unable to proceed to sea, owing to the severity of a contagious disorder, which prevailed among the seamen and soldiers, which carried off numbers every day, and almost unmanned several of the ships.
